Latin is a great language for Biology and Health Professions majors.
Within the Latin 111 curriculum are lectures and projects where students with an interest in medicine and biology will learn the Latin roots used in medical terminology and anatomy. Many science majors with an interest in anatomy and physiology who have taken the Latin 111/112 sequence have stated how helpful Latin has been in learning terminology for their biology classes.

If you have any questions about Latin 111, please contact Kathleen de Riesthal at kathleen.deriesthal@stonybrook.edu.

WRT 380.01: Advanced Research Writing: Theories, Methods, Practices

Good research skills are critical to academic success. Most disciplines require writing based upon research, as arguments and explanations make little impact on audiences without effective supporting evidence, drawn from relevant scholarship on the subject. This involves knowing how to use appropriate databases, source materials, and composing processes, as well as negotiating the values, genres, and languages of the scholarly communities in which one is researching. In this course, students will learn fundamentals of research methods, practice these methods in a series of integrated research and writing assignments, and engage in critical reflection about research and writing. Students will focus on an area of disciplinary interest to them, and practice these essential research and writing skills through a series of projects: library assignments, research log, research proposal, annotated bibliography, literature review, abstract, and research paper.
