The third College of Arts and Sciences faculty workshop for 2015-16 was held October 20th focusing on the Stony Brook University Program in Writing and Rhetoric. Cynthia Davidson (Writing Program), Robert Kaplan (Writing Program), Peter Khost (Writing Program), and Christian Luhmann (Psychology) served as panelist offering advice and examples on how the Writing Program can be used to advance student writing across disciplines.

The Writing Program described how they help faculty design their curriculum to assign, teach, and assess student writing in the classroom fulfilling the requirement that students demonstrate effective writing in their discipline. The Program also has a Writing Center which serves both students and faculty who need assistance with their writing skills. Program panelists presented diverse tools, such as peer-review and online resources, to facilitate improved writing skills inside and outside of the classroom. A videotape of the workshop is available here: https://echocontent.sinc.stonybrook.edu/ess/echo/presentation/a4e7e791-8845-43ad-b9cc-b87d22839383

The Program in Writing and Rhetoric is located in 2005 Humanities and at (631) 632-7390; the Writing Center is located in 2009 Humanities and at (631) 632-7405.