Professor Altman studied the biosyntheses of terpenes and steroids, particularly those incorporating cyclopropane rings. He and his colleagues used tritium nuclear magnetic resonance to elucidate stereochemical features of these reactions, and they used comparative $^1$H, $^2$H and $^3$H NMR measurements to infer the potential energy profile of intramolecular hydrogen bonds in steroids.