Gregg Seibert serves as vice chairman of Cablevision Systems Corporation, working on the company's overall long-term strategic and financial initiatives. As a senior member of Cablevision's leadership team, he provides strategic and financial counsel to the company. In 2015, The Madison Square Garden Company and AMC Networks Inc. also appointed Mr. Seibert vice chairman of their respective companies.

In addition to his role as vice chairman, Mr. Seibert also previously served as Cablevision's chief financial officer where he oversaw the company's finance and accounting matters as well as its taxation and risk management functions. He was also responsible for all treasury, investor relations and business development activities for the company.

Since joining Cablevision in 2009, Mr. Seibert has played an instrumental role in a number of the company's key strategic initiatives including the spin-offs of The Madison Square Garden Company and AMC Networks Inc., and the acquisition of and subsequent sale of Bresnan Communications. He also has overseen a number of financing transactions that have significantly improved the company's financial profile. Furthermore, he handled capital and cash management as well as the communication of the company's operational and financial objectives to individual and institutional shareholders, financial analysts and investment managers.

Before joining Cablevision, Mr. Seibert held several senior leadership positions at Merrill Lynch including vice chairman, head of corporate finance and head of the global media practice.

Mr. Seibert received his MBA from the Wharton School of the University of Pennsylvania.
Department of Economics at SBU

The economics department started its undergraduate program in the early 1960s, and as of the 2013-14 academic year we have taught an average of 18 classes per semester with a total of students in our classes of approximately 1,500 students per semester. We also teach around 350 additional students who attend summer and winter sessions. Faculty members teach 62% of the undergraduate students in a given semester. The rest of the students are taught by our advanced graduate students who are enrolled in our PhD program. We have around 750 majors, a large number of them double-majors.

The fields of study currently offered by the department of economics are as follows (faculty members in the field, including affiliated faculty, in brackets):

- Game Theory/Microeconomic Theory (Brusco, Chen, Dubey, Liu, Tauman)
- Macroeconomic Theory (Anagnostopoulos, Atesagaoglu, Azzimonti, Carceles- Poveda, Conesa, Muench, Zhao)
- Labor Economics (Benítez-Silva, Montgomery, Sanderson,)
- Industrial Organization (Brusco, Liu, Tauman, Zhou)
- Computational Economics (Benítez-Silva, Cárceles-Poveda, Conesa, Chen)
- Applied Econometrics/Econometrics (Benítez-Silva, Centorrino, Dawes, Montgomery, Muench, Rachev, Zhou)
- Financial Economics (Brusco, Rachev, Zhao)
- Economic Demography and Economic Development (Sanderson, Montgomery)
- Health Economics (Dwyer, Liu, Rizzo, Sanderson)
- Public Economics and Public Finance (Benítez-Silva, Zweig)

A Graduate addresses his peers:

Prabhat Yeturu is from Roslyn, New York. He came to Stony Brook University with an interest in Economics and Medicine. His accomplishments at Stony Brook include publishing research, tutoring international students in English, and studying abroad in Tanzania, where he volunteered at an orphanage. Prabhat is an active member in Stony Brook Student Life. As the treasurer of the Economics Club, he has begun the process of revitalizing the Economics Club and Omicron Delta Epsilon Honor Society into influential forces on the Stony Brook campus. Prabhat plans on attending medical school in August.