This talk takes literally the title of the series, Journeys Through Enlightenment, by following Wordsworth’s successive trips to Europe, from the days of the French Revolution in the 1790s through the post-Napoleonic 1820s to a final visit in 1837. These returns map a changing intellectual itinerary as notable and culturally resonant as Wordsworth’s famous exclamation on the Revolution: “Bliss was it in that dawn to be alive, / But to be young was very heaven!”
