

Provost's Lecture Series

Diplomacy in Times Of Global Change

Harald Braun

Stony Brook University alumnus Harald Braun is a senior German diplomat with extensive professional experience in both international diplomacy and business. An economist and historian by training, Braun has served more than three decades in diplomatic posts on four continents and with the United Nations. That included rounds as chief political officer in Washington, D.C., special envoy for Afghanistan reconstruction, deputy national security advisor to the German chancellor, and currently, minister plenipotentiary in Paris. Ambassador Braun's career in private business includes several years as senior vice president with major international companies. In 2008, he was invited to join Stony Brook University's faculty and Institute for Global Studies as part-time research professor for Global Studies and Diplomacy.
