ANT 367 explores human sexuality and examines the influence of culture on gender identification and sexuality. Is human sexuality determined in your genes or does culture play a role in choosing a mate and in gender identification? What is the difference between male/female and gender? This course will focus on Latin American culture and the role that history and religion have had in shaping Latino sexuality and gender roles. The course uses a multi-disciplinary approach to investigate the topic. Sources include: evolutionary biology, historical documents, anthropology theory, Hispanic literature and film.

Instructor: Madeline del Toro Cherney
Department of Anthropology