

History

A student of history is well positioned for a wide variety of work in the 21st century's highly integrated global society. People knowledgeable in the histories, geography, and culture of the world and those capable of communicating concisely and effectively offer value to all organizations, regardless of field or scope. History majors, indeed most students of the liberal arts, have an abundance of worthwhile and satisfying careers to choose from.

Transferable Skills

- Highly developed analytical and critical thinking skills
- Ability to share and conduct research
- Technical writing and rhetorical skills
- Didactic, presentation, & public speaking skills
- Cultural competency
- Ability to convey information clearly, concisely, & tactfully
- Time management
- Ability to solve intricate problems

Career Communities to Consider

- Applied Science & Research
- Arts & Communications
- Business
- Education & Helping Professions
- Government & Public Service