MASTER'S LEVEL

EGL/WRT 506.01 (88278) Studies in Literary Theory
Prerequisite: Enrollment in an English Graduate Program or Advanced Graduate Certificate in Teaching Writing Program

This course focuses on key critical concepts, theoretical issues, and methodological concerns that have shaped, and continue to shape, the study of literature.

LEC 01 WEDNESDAY 5:30-8:20 NIKOS PANOU

EGL 560.01 (95089) Studies in Early American Literature
Prerequisite: Enrollment in English Graduate Program

This hybrid course focuses on principal genres in colonial and early American literature, including narratives of captivity among Native Americans, slave narratives, and seduction fiction. All of the readings will be available as e-texts. We will meet in person for several sessions*, and participate online every week. The online component will include participation in virtual discussion and annotation. Assessments will include presentation, a short paper, and a longer one.

*In-person meeting dates: 8/27, 9/3, 9/24, 10/8, 10/29, 11/19, 12/3

LEC 01 TUES/FLEX 5:30-8:20 ANDREW NEWMAN

EGL 584.01 (87706) Topics in Genre Studies: Shakespearean Tragedy
Prerequisite: Enrollment in English Graduate Program

This course provides an introduction to Shakespeare’s tragedies through an intensive reading of the plays in combination with viewing version of them on film. On the one hand, we approach each play as a written, published text: our in-class conversation consist primarily in close analysis of key passages, and, in one class period, we visit Special Collections to examine the earliest printed versions of the plays in light of English Renaissance print technology. On the other hand, you will view performances of each assigned play. Our semester’s through line is to trace, from the earliest of Shakespeare’s tragic compositions, Titus Andronicus, to his major tragedies, Shakespeare’s remarkable development of the techniques of characterization that have made generations of both playgoers and readers feel that his dramatic personae are so modern, real, human. We will also devote attention to exploring the value of each play in our present moment and on our local stages. We read at least the following, including a few comedies with significantly tragic elements: Titus Andronicus, Richard III, Midsummer Night’s Dream, Julius Caesar, Macbeth, Othello, Hamlet, King Lear. There will be weekly Blackboard postings, a series of short explications of key passages of text, a 15-minute class presentation, and a 20-page final paper.

LEC 01 MONDAY 5:30-8:20 DOUGLAS PFEIFFER
EGL/WRT 592.01 (81701) Problems in Teaching Writing or Composition
Prerequisite: Enrollment in English Graduate Program or Advanced Graduate Certificate in Teaching Writing Program

Advanced study of theories and approaches to the teaching of writing. Building on the understanding that writing is a recursive process (a cycle of planning, drafting, revising, and editing), students learn to analyze and problem-solve issues that become barriers for effective writing and communication. Students learn to understand and differentiate rhetorical, ethical, social justice, and political issues surrounding the mentoring of writers. There is extensive analysis of the differences among various approaches, debates, and ethical issues in a variety of rhetorical contexts and courses that involve writing. This course is designed for those who are, or will be, teaching courses that involve writing.

EGL 600.01 (87430) Pro-Seminar: The Discipline of Literary Studies
Prerequisite: Enrollment in English Ph.D. program or permission of instructor

This course provides an introduction to graduate studies in English—at Stony Brook and at this moment in the history of the profession. We will survey various historical and emerging approaches to literary study, including textual criticism, the history of the book, critical race theory, affect theory, digital humanities, public humanities and more. Faculty members from English and closely related departments will speak on their own scholarship, methodologies and professional experiences. Students will analyze and practice some of genres of academic writing they will produce during their graduate careers, including abstracts, conference papers, blogs, seminar papers, articles and proposals for various purposes. Regular participation and in-class presentations, several short papers, one longer paper and one "conference" presentation are required.

EGL 606.01 (88280) Period and Tradition: Irish Modernism: Joyce, Beckett, Bowen
Prerequisite: Enrollment in English Ph.D. program or permission of instructor

Ireland produced some of the most revered writing in English in the modernist period. How might we account for the outsized effect that a small colonial backwater like Ireland had on one of the most energetic and inventive literary movements of the last two centuries? We will examine the literary works of only a handful of these writers: some, like Joyce and Beckett, very well known, and others, like Flann O’Brien and Elizabeth Bowen, less so. Regular class participation and a long (10-12 pages) final research paper are amongst the requirements.

EGL 606.02 (95088) Period and Tradition: Traveling People, Traveling Texts: Anglophone Postcolonial Literature
Prerequisite: Enrollment in English Ph.D. program or permission of instructor

The processes of colonization and decolonization have led to the movement of people and cultures across the globe, forming a complex and heterogeneous network of relations among postcolonial subjects from different geopolitical locales. What happens when colonial and postcolonial subjects travel between the metropole and the colony? What happens when postcolonial writers travel back to the past to write about the colonial era? How do the movement of people and the circulation of cultures shape and reshape history? How does postcolonial literature address questions of cultural mediation and intercultural understanding in the age of postcolonialism and global migration? What role does language play in the conditioning of travel in postcolonial narratives? And how does linguistic and cultural translation facilitate our understanding of the movement of people and circulation of cultures in postcolonial conditions? This seminar will examine the above questions by focusing on Anglophone literature that addresses issues relating to the violence and justice of colonialism, the process of decolonization, and the experience of diaspora. We will pay special attention to issues of race, ethnicity, gender, sexuality, and language. Authors include: Jean Rhys, Sam Selvon, Salman Rushdie, Amitav Ghosh, Zadie Smith, J.M. Coetzee, Viet Thanh Nguyen, Shawna Yang Ryan, etc.

EGL/WRT 614.01 (87435) Topics in Composition and Writing: Rhetor Response Theory

Prerequisite: Enrollment in English Ph.D. program or Advanced Graduate Certificate in Teaching Writing Program and completion of either EGL/WRT 592 or WRT/EGL 698.

This course (offered only online in fall 2019) crosses disciplinary boundaries in pursuit of theories that do not occupy a stable home in any one field, including reader-response criticism, ethical literary criticism, affordance theory, speech act theory, and autoethnography. Our aim is to develop working approaches to the question of what “literary” texts (broadly conceived) do rhetorically and, especially, what might be done with them pedagogically beyond interpretive treatments common to postsecondary and secondary classrooms. The backdrop consists of complicated politics between English and Composition Studies, as well as institutional labor issues and the burgeoning Writing about Writing movement. Course materials also derive from Cultural Studies, Philosophy, Sociology, Anthropology, Ecological Psychology, and Cognitive Science. Assignments include low-stakes reading responses, autoethnographic research and writing, student-led workshops, and a final project. This course promises to be useful to English or Composition scholars seeking to expand their theoretical and pedagogical repertoires, and potentially to anyone interested in exploring how (unconventional) things are and can be done with literary texts.

EGL 615 Independent Study

Prerequisite: Enrollment in English MA, Ph.D. or MAT Programs or permission of instructor
