Public Graduate Humanities Fellows Lectures
Spring 2018

Allyse Knox-Russell
PhD Candidate
Women’s Gender & Sexuality Studies

“Interdisciplinary Obstacles: Teaching Environmental Justice K-12”

Tuesday, April 24, 2018
4:00 PM
1008 Humanities

Students at all levels need the tools provided by both the humanities and sciences to imagine just solutions to ongoing ecological crises. Yet, interdisciplinarity remains a challenge for both university and K-12 educators. How can we help youth make the connections they require to work towards a more livable world?

Allyse Knox-Russell is a PhD candidate in Women’s, Gender, and Sexuality Studies at Stony Brook. Her dissertation project explores the ways that gender, race, and indigeneity influence embodied experiences of land and place. Her public humanities project, LI Reads for the Environment, will be a summer reading and discussion series for high school youth focused on climate change and environmental justice.

Questions? See our website www.stonybrook.edu/hisb.

The Humanities Institute at Stony Brook | 1013 Humanities Bldg | Stony Brook University | Stony Brook, NY 11794-5354