Dear Friends,

Bamboo is a plant like no other. Due to its size and stature, some call it a tree. Botanists say it’s technically grass. It’s strong, flexible, lightweight, and grows remarkably fast. Throughout history, bamboo and humanity have exchanged many lessons and secrets, and the hardy plant has proven to be an inspiring symbol of versatility, elegance, and resilience. The Charles B. Wang Center’s new cultural programs highlight the importance of bamboo in Japanese arts, crafts, and horticulture as well as philosophy. So please be sure to visit the Wang Center and take in the beauty of bamboo baskets and their positive presence in contemporary society. We hope that this season’s exhibition, workshops, lectures, performances, and festivals will serve as seeds of insight that may sprout in your imagination.

With kind regards,

Jinyoung A. Jin

Charles B. Wang Center
The aesthetic beauty of woven Japanese bamboo baskets has been praised and acknowledged for centuries. To this day, bamboo baskets are an integral and cherished part of the flower arrangement (ikebana) and tea ceremony in Japan. The Charles B. Wang Center celebrates the extraordinary beauty and intricate craftsmanship of Japanese bamboo baskets with a new generation of Japanese artists who produce functional, sculptural, and refined works with their individual sensibility and creativity. Twenty-seven baskets on display reflect the longstanding basket-weaving traditions and modern transformations of Japanese basketry with advanced plaiting skills and experimentation with new shapes. All works are on loan from TAI Modern.

Curated by Jinyoung A. Jin, director of cultural programs at the Charles B. Wang Center, the treasures in this exhibition take visitors on a remarkable journey across regions and time.

The Lunar New Year is the biggest holiday in China and is celebrated over the course of 16 days. The last day of festivities is known as the Lantern Festival (Yuan xiao jie), which marks the first full moon of the new year. It’s the final day to celebrate, so people light lanterns and firecrackers, lion dance, and eat tangyuan, a round glutinous rice ball usually filled with a sweet filling like black sesame paste. Tangyuan is an special staple of the Lunar New Year since it symbolizes togetherness, reunion, and fortune.

Second-generation Chinese Americans Ashley Xie and Hedy Yu are the co-founders of Rooted Fare, a company that sells black sesame butter, a Chinese pantry staple inspired by their favorite dessert, sweet tangyuan. They will talk about their Chinese heritage, culinary culture, and how a new generation of Chinese Americans maintains and enlivens their culture in America.

This special program will also offer a tasting session with black sesame paste to hopefully bring good fortune this year!
Ayelet Zohar will discuss the camel in Japanese art and visual culture, from early depictions in the Nara period to Edo era, until the first living pair arrived in Japan in 1821. The arrival of the giraffes created a boom of hundreds of misemono roadshows, as well as numerous images in paintings and prints. However, the most intriguing examples come from the 20th century, after Japan became a leading power in Asia. Camels became trophies, living symbols of Japan’s military success on the mainland. They were displayed prominently in scientific zoological gardens, served as beasts of burden in tourist venues, and recruited by the Japanese military to carry its arsenal and supplies. Zohar then moves to discuss images of camels in the postwar period, where they were transformed into Buddhist messengers of peace and harmony, crossing the deserts of Central Asia in yet another imaginary projection of Japan’s relations with Asia. The camel—whether as a mythical beast, a wartime trophy, or a beast of burden—is an ever shifting icon of attitudes toward Asia in the Japanese imagination.
LISTENING TO BAMBOO

Rob Coffland traces the development of Japanese bamboo art from a folk craft to a sculptural art form. The abundance of bamboo in Japan naturally led to its widespread usage in everything, including building materials, fences, fish traps, musical instruments, weapons, boxes, and baskets. When Japan was closed to trade during the Edo Period, the import of goods from China—including bamboo baskets—was drastically restricted. This gave rise to the domestic fabrication of high-quality copies. As Japan began reopening in the middle of the 19th century, Hayakawa Shokosai I began to incorporate his own ideas into these Chinese-style baskets, eventually signing his baskets and declaring himself an artist. Others followed his lead, sparking a rapid evolution that continues to this day. There are fewer than 100 bamboo artists in Japan today. Despite this, contemporary bamboo art remains an exciting and vibrant art form.
MISS HOKUSAI

(2015 | 90 minutes | Animation | Directed by Keiichi Hara)

Miss Hokusai is an animated movie based on the Japanese historical manga series of the same name written and illustrated by Hinako Sugiura. It tells the story of O-Ei Katsushika, an artist who worked in the shadow of her father, the revered painter Hokusai. The film is filled with yōkai, spirits, dragons, and conniving tradesmen, while O-Ei’s relationships with her demanding father and her blind younger sister provide a powerful emotional underpinning to this sumptuously animated coming-of-age tale.

THE DEER KING

In the aftermath of a brutal war, a former soldier named Van toils in a mine controlled by the ruling empire. His solitary existence is upended, however, when a pack of wild dogs carrying a mysterious and fatal disease attacks the mine, leaving only Van and a young girl named Yuna as survivors. Finally free, the pair seek out a simple existence in the countryside but are pursued by nefarious forces. Intent on protecting Yuna at all costs, Van must uncover the true cause of the plague ravaging the kingdom—and its possible cure.

Join us to learn the basics of weaving! In conjunction with the Wang Center’s current exhibition featuring Japanese baskets, the artist Heechan Kim will offer a hands-on weaving workshop for beginners. You’ll weave a flat reed coaster using simple tools and naturally grown materials that will be right at home with your most modern decor. By the end of class, you’ll have completed a five-inch coaster in a timeless design that’s perfect for holding a small object or a drink. No basket-weaving experience is necessary and all materials and equipment will be provided.
THE ART OF BONSAI

By Robert Mahler

Bonsai is the ancient Japanese art of growing and cultivating miniature trees in pots. It is a subtle and elegant form that helps connect us to nature. Learn the artistic, philosophical, horticultural, and technical techniques to design, plant, and maintain your own bonsai.

Robert Mahler will lead a hands-on workshop where participants will be able to shape their own bonsai tree and learn about how to prune, shape, maintain, and re-pot bonsai trees.

Co-presented by the Long Island Bonsai Society.

PLAYING WITH CABLE TIES

By Sui Park

In conjunction with the Wang Center’s current exhibition featuring Japanese baskets, the New York–based artist Sui Park introduces her signature sculptures made of cable ties and demonstrates various ways of making art out of such everyday materials. Participants will have a chance to explore and create their own artwork to take home when finished. The workshop will provide cable ties in various colors that participants can weave and craft in multiple ways.
Evoking mythography and ancestry, Let the Crows Come focuses on the symbolism of crows as messengers for the living and guides for the departed. This 60-minute performance explores how memory and homeland channel guidance and dislocation. Featuring Ramaswamy (Bharatanatyam technique), Alanna Morris (Afro-Modern technique), and Berit Ahlgren (Gaga technique), a dance is deconstructed and recontextualized to recall a shared memory remembered differently from person to person.
Ak Dan Gwang Chil (ADG7) presents a rich repertoire rooted in sacred, shamanic ritual music (gut) and beloved folk songs (minyo) of Hwanghae Province, South Korea, with a dash of modern K-pop stylings. The band’s charismatic and fashionably dressed trio of folk singers are backed by master musicians playing traditional Korean instruments.
